What happened? Snowball Earth, Snowman... What happened? Humans began to struggle with the environments of their planet. But then, a group of researchers suggested that there was a way to reverse the processes of evolution. They used an asteroid to propel a comet into the atmosphere of Earth. This one missile would reduce all lifeforms to about the level of the most primitive lifeforms of the sea. And then they would slowly return to the levels of life of today. This should work, they thought. As a result of this plan, all living creatures that now live on Earth, died. And the planet itself took a long time to clean itself. Finally, the planet was in such a condition that it was not inhabited by any living creatures. But then, again, it had a new process of another group of scientists. They changed the sea into a snowball by impacting it with meteorites. And snowmen were created. After a long period, they also survived. But they took a lot of time to return to their former form. And then, the "snow" of the snowmen began to melt. They slowly got back to the sea and life on Earth began to develop again. Alcoholic liver disease (ALD) is characterized by hepatic lipoprotein abnormalities with subsequent deposition of lipid in liver. The effect of therapy with the known hypolipidemic drug, daminocyclopentanecarboxylic acid (DAC), on hepatic lipid metabolism was studied in ALD. The value of plasma triglyceride, cholesterol and phospholipids levels was monitored in all the patients. The function of lysosomal membrane and its enzymatic activities were studied in livers of patients. Thirty-one patients with chronic alcohol ingestion were examined. The control group included 30 healthy volunteers. The plasma triglyceride levels of the
