This macro allows you to combine the Alt-Tab, Alt-F4, or Ctrl-Alt-Backspace keys (which are the “kill” keys) into a single macro. The Alt-Tab combination generally kills the application that is current in the foreground, while the Alt-F4 combination often kills the application that is current in the background. By combining these two keys into a single macro, the resulting macro executes the “kill” action of the Alt-Tab combination only when the Alt-Tab key combination is pressed. Description: If you frequently use the Alt-Tab and Alt-F4 combinations, you may want to use the Alt-Tab key combination to kill the application that is currently active in the foreground (the current application that is being displayed on the screen) and you may also want to use the Alt-F4 key combination to kill the application that is currently active in the background (the application that is not currently being displayed on the screen). If you have done these two things, you will have to frequently press the Alt-Tab and Alt-F4 key combinations to kill the active application. If you are in such a situation, you may wish to use this macro to perform a “kill” action by pressing the Alt-Tab key combination only when the Alt-Tab key combination is pressed.
