and I noticed a lot of my friends and family members were doing the same.
I, too, looked around and saw a handful of parents who were experimenting with this new technology. People were taking selfies with children! And I even saw a few parents using their smartphones to take pictures of their kids at bath time. I was shocked. This summer, I've been around many of these same parents taking lots of selfies and shooting videos of their kids. I've seen an incredible number of school-aged kids who are being told what to do for a picture, some that are directing their parents and others who are completely unaware that they are being photographed. For parents who are exploring the art and the science of taking pictures, I have three tips to help you and your family be comfortable with the new cameras we all carry around with us. #1 – Don't Take A Picture If You Don't Know It Let's face it, children are very sneaky. They have a fantastic ability to get in front of a camera and act as though it is the most normal thing in the world for a parent to want to take a picture of them. A lot of parents are getting comfortable with the cameras that we now carry around on our phones and tablets. Most of those parents aren't photographers and don't know how to use the picture-taking aspects of the cameras. This summer is the perfect opportunity for parents to brush up on their photography skills. Go to the “family” section of your camera and experiment with some of the features that allow you to take great shots. You’ll learn how to take basic family photos. At first, your photos may look a little odd, but you’ll soon learn how to take a picture and have some fun experimenting with it. If you want to focus more on the artistic side, you can take some of the features off and just use them for fun. It’s okay to mess around, but stay aware that no one should be held or have their hands in the
