eIF2A overexpression results in inhibition of NF- $\kappa$ B activity in PC12 cells. Eukaryotic initiation factor 2A (eIF2A) is known to play an important role in the regulation of translation in eukaryotic cells. Here we investigated the effects of eIF2A overexpression on nuclear factor kappa B (NF- $\kappa$ B) activation in PC12 cells using reporter gene and electrophoretic mobility shift assays. Our results indicated that a short treatment (6 h) with recombinant human nerve growth factor (NGF) led to an increase in NF- $\kappa$ B activity in PC12 cells.

Overexpression of eIF2A in these cells inhibited NF- $\kappa$ B activity.

The inhibitory effect of eIF2A was mediated by two factors: I $\kappa$ B degradation and cytoplasmic translocation of NF- $\kappa$ B surgery. Their treatment must be performed in specialized centers by means of an ideal surgical technique, but the indication for surgery is well codified. The indication of the distal radial fracture is based on four factors: the type of fracture, the fracture-dislocation, the radius shortening, and the patient's age. Distal radial fractures of type A and B must be operated early. Distal
